

The 6th of March 2018

Organisational structure of University College Copenhagen

Today, the Board of Directors approved the new organisational structure of University College Copenhagen

“Following the official merger to become University College Copenhagen, the new university college will also establish a new organisational structure. The organisational structure is the supporting foundation that assists us in realising our ambitions for the new university college. Our ambitions include strengthening the quality of teaching and education through professional relations and working environment, promote welfare development via well-qualified professionals, and assure a strong organisation,” said Stefan Hermann, Vice-Chancellor of University College Copenhagen.

The new organisational structure will consist of five main pillars (units): three educational faculties (Faculty of Education, Faculty of Social Science and Pedagogy, and Faculty of Health) including research and development, further education, and resources and administration.

You can read more about the new organisation and organisational structure at fusionsinfo.dk (Danish).

Stefan Hermann, Vice-Chancellor of University College Copenhagen, will host two public informational meetings on the new organisation and organisational structure on 7 March 2018.